The History of Morley Hayes

Morley Hayes was the original estate farm to the adjacent Morley Manor. The Manor was first mentioned in the year 1002

When the Domesday Book was compiled, the estate belonged to Henry de Ferrers, then in the reign of Henry III to the Abbey of Chester and at the dissolution it was conferred upon Sir William Paget.

On the forfeiture of the Paget estates it was granted by James I to Anthony Roper and from thence passed into the hands of the Sacheverells.

Sir Hugh Sacheverell was fatally injured in Morley Woods whilst returning from hunting at Elvaston Castle. He is buried in the beautiful mausoleum in the grounds of St Mathews Church. Following his death the estate was acquired by the Fitz-Herbert-Wright family, owners of The Butterley Company and builders of St. Pancras Station in London.

Following the sale of the estate, The Manor became an orphanage and the Morley Hayes farm a very successful dairy farm. Morley Hayes farm bred a world famous herd of Friesian cattle, the Feran Herd.

The Allsop family, still the present owners and operators, purchased Morley Hayes in the early 1980's and continued to farm the land until the decline in UK farming.

The decision to diversify led to the construction of the golf courses and restaurant.

Careful restoration work has allowed much of the historic character of the farm to remain. The extension to the Roosters Bar was built out of reclaimed Pennine Stone. This was taken from railway tunnels in Manchester and you can still see soot on a few of the stones near the entrance to Roosters Bar.

The Morley Hayes Hotel was opened in 2005 by HRH The Duke of Gloucester.

A map of the Morley Hayes estate hangs in Roosters Bar.
